(U) Man, I used to love that show.

Other shows:

The show Burn Notice featured a spy who wasn't "strictly affiliated with any one agency" or however he put it. But there was a recurring character who showed up a few times with a bad from "CSS". I don't remember why they didn't just call him an NSA person. Maybe they referred to it as the military arm of NSA. I remember thinking it was a weird distinction...especially since he was in a suit, not a uniform.

The show Timeless had NSA show up recently (haven't watched the last few episodes so I don't know what they're up to currently). Mostly to be an antagonist (obviously).

(U) Another TV show with an NSA Storyline that I did not know about. ....

I know there are others because I usually go, "...it doesn't work like that," whenever they portray NSA and it seems like it's been happening a lot more frequently in the last few years for some reason....but I'm drawing a blank.

(U) I would recommend you take a look at the TV series 'Burn Notice' that was on for several seasons. It is about a CIA agent who has been burned and sidelined for something he didn't do. He attempts to find out why, running into previous friends and frenemies from various intel organizations in many different countries. They include dastardly NSA/FBI/DOD/CIA, and everybody else, representatives tracking him. His girl friend is an Irish IRA weapons expert and he finds himself in the midst of continuous chaos. The cast is excellent. All of the shows are both humorous and provide, more or less, technical info on how intelligence is gathered.

(U) That's kind of like when I have to tell my ISP that "no, actually, I don't have cable tv and don't want cable tv". People boggle. Like, "you can actually just not get tv? OMG!"

(U) Then I get to explain that it's cheaper to buy the full season (and with iTunes offering season passes now, I can usually keep up with a tv show about as it's coming out and not have to wait until it comes out on dvd, or, in the case of Burn Notice, USA airs the episodes the next day or so on their website) of the two or three tv shows that I'm interested in as opposed to paying ~$40 a month for a bunch of channels and shows I don't care to watch and never will.

(U) I've never seen it. Is that a show filmed in Miami about football? I watched Burn Notice when it was on... hahah... that's filmed right by Biscayne Bay and South Beach. My sister-in-law used to have a condo in Biscayne, and she used to be able to see them filming many of the scenes from her balcony.

(U) My favorite Miami TV show though, is Miami Vice. There are actually quite a few former Miami Dolphins players in that TV show. They would occasionally get the "extra" parts... some of them with speaking roles, which is funny. Any Given Sunday (with the Miami Sharks versus whoever), also had a bunch of Miami Dolphins staff... like the grounds crew, equipment staff, and the medical trainers... they just hired them on to do those scenes in the movie. Dexter was pretty good. The whole first season was filmed in downtown Miami, but then they moved production to California, and only filmed scenes in Miami when they needed landmarks (like anything on South Beach, or whatever).

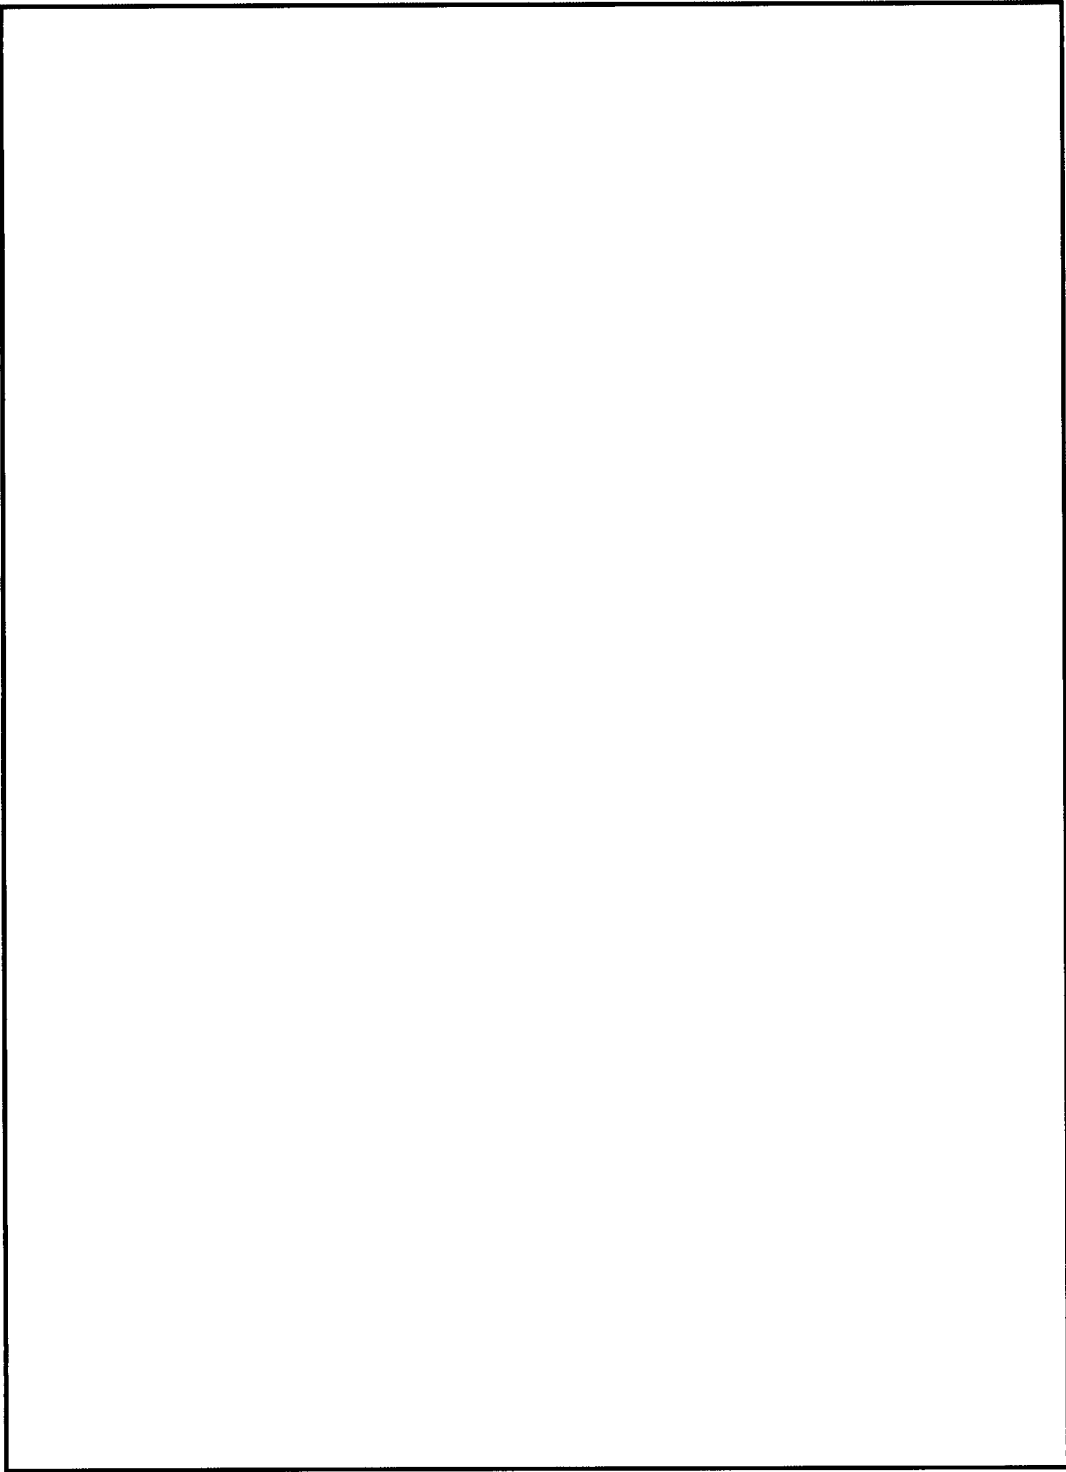

(U) I'm re-watching all the X-Files episodes though... in preparation for the new X-Files series that comes out in January... I'm not ashamed to admit it... totally psyched. I grew up in the DC / Metro area, so I love seeing lots of areas in and around Maryland and Northern Virginia. (They filmed most of the woodsy scenes in Canada though...)
